REMARKS ON THE STATUS OF REPRESENTATIVES TO THE PARLIAMENT OF THE FIFTH FRENCH REPUBLIC

The Author discusses the status of a deputy and a senator in the political system of contemporary France. The constitution of the Fifth Republic devotes a lot of space to this status. However, detailed regulation is contained in organic law. The Author widely discusses the regulation of incompatibility and ineligibility. He points out that these provisions are intended to protect representatives against any non-parliamentary pressure. He also emphasizes the admissibility of connecting a parliamentary mandate with public functions exercised by choice, particularly in local government and the European Union. On the other hand, the Constitution prohibits connecting the mandate with the function of a minister. Therefore, it was necessary to present the institution of a deputy member of the parliament and its regulation. The Author widely discusses the institution of immunity irresponsibility and integrity, dating back to 1789, as well as parliamentary allowances, which are referred as “reasonable” in French literature.
